Course Description:

With the world’s 7 billion human population rapidly consuming finite carbon-based resources, there is growing interest in the creation of viable and sustainable living patterns within the parameters of our planet’s environment. How can this imperative be balanced with our need for meaningful employment and the continuation of productive industries? This course introduces students to creative, practice-based responses to this enormous 21st century challenge.

The structure of the class involves informal lectures, seminars, discussions, film extracts and site visits.

Students will be directed to many internet sites and will need to use these to link, explore and research course themes, always crediting and fully referencing sources.
